Campaigns & Classified:

Campaigns Lead the Way to More Profits

How often does your sales team present campaigns to prospective advertisers as opposed to a single ad? Metro has learned that, for a variety of reasons, presentations of campaigns are limited. This equates to a lot of potential dollars being left on the table. To help you address this situation, we develop a series of multiple-ad campaigns in every issue of Campaigns & Classified.

The first six pages of each issue are filled with a series of multiple-ad campaigns dedicated to the local advertisers and advertiser categories that are the key ad sales targets for each quarter of the year. View these pages in the print book or online in the interactive SearchBook™.

Recent issues included campaigns for:

- auto parts advertisers
- gas and convenience stores
- sporting goods stores
- liquor and beverage stores
- home and furniture stores
- building supply stores
- restaurants
- banks and financial advertisers
- livestock services
- motorcycle dealers
- fitness centers
- auto dealers

Page 5 of each issue is dedicated to a print, Web and mobile campaign for an auto dealer. You get a full- or tab-size ad, smaller-space 2-column ads, and digital companion ads in the five most-used mobile and online ad sizes.

Page 6 is devoted to a 13-time campaign for auto after-market advertisers (car repair, tires, parts, etc.) that can be sold as a quarterly buy or for 13 insertions. Additional campaigns are presented for auto, real estate and recruitment advertisers as well as self-promotional campaigns for you to spotlight the vast array of services that you can offer both advertisers and readers.

Campaign selling will vary from one publication to another and can encompass a wide variety of package deals, including print to Web and mobile. Some will entail long-term advertiser commitments amounting to quarter-, half- and full-year contracts. For others, short-term, multiple-insertion packages make more sense. Whatever your approach, Metro Campaigns & Classified delivers a targeted selection of ready-to-sell campaigns in every issue. Take a look at the Campaigns & Classified SearchBooks or the print book, then plan your sales approach to create, sell and profit with campaigns. M

Ad campaigns aimed at a variety of your local advertisers are available in every issue of Campaigns & Classified.

Every issue of Campaigns & Classified contains a 13-time campaign for auto-related advertisers, and a print, mobile and Web campaign for auto dealers.

CAMPAIGNS

Find a fresh assortment of ready-to-present upsell opportunities for third-quarter sales calls.

- Find a 13-part automotive campaign showcasing a repair shop's various services and specials, as well as campaigns for car dealers, real estate, recruitment and your publication (5, 6, 21, 25, 37).
- Find a ready-to-present-and-sell campaign for a fine dining restaurant emphasizing personalized services to make celebrations extra special (4).
- A building supply campaign spotlights lumberyard deals, tools on sale and equipment rentals (4).
- Find campaigns created for both a liquor store and a liquor distributor (2, 3).
- Other campaign ads offer promotional ideas for gas stations and auto parts stores (1).
- Promote new merchandise and special offers from a resale furniture store and secondhand sporting goods store (2, 3).

AUTOMOTIVE PROMOTIONS

Rev up third-quarter revenue with automotive coverage to motivate dealers to action.

- In addition to this month's auto services campaign, find a print and online ad campaign for a car dealer that asks customers "How much will you save?" (5).
- Help dealers tie in promotions to seasonal events with ads themed for July 4th, Canada Day, Labor Day, summertime, payment vacations and back-to-school time (7, 9-11, 14).
- Put the focus on local, friendly service right around fair days with an ad for "the best deals fair and square" (8).
- Other promotions like "employee pricing back by popular demand," "redline clearance" prices, sign and drive, and pre-owned guarantees closed sales year-round (10, 12, 13, 17).
- Get a head start on 2017 launch events (15).

REAL ESTATE PROMOTIONS

Sell, sell, sell with ads for a wide range of real estate advertisers.

- Find a print and online campaign promoting your publication's online real estate section and search capabilities to buyers and sellers (25).
- Present listings from local realtors with several fresh layouts for resale homes and open houses and niche marketing angles such as "starter home specialists" and a real estate expert's "rules of home selling" (26, 29, 30, 32).
- Put the focus on local relationships with an ad that incorporates "the freedom of home ownership" with a free July 4th barbecue event (27).
- Other ads promote condominiums, apartments and a new construction community (30, 31, 32).
- Help realtors attract listings with an ad that says "See what we've sold in your neighborhood" (31).
- Plus, find an eye-catching home services layout (28).

SUBSCRIPTION & CLASSIFIED AD SELF-PROMOTION

Showcase your own publication's products, services and special features!

- Run a campaign promoting the various facets of your publication's Classifieds section. From being the best place to discover local garage sales to serving as a go-to marketplace for cars, motorcycles, boats and more, these ads are designed to appeal to a variety of buyers and sellers (21).
- A full-page subscription promotion focuses on the "added value" your publication delivers to readers, from money-saving coupons and offers to the latest income opportunities, topped off with a print and online subscription special (22).
- Find additional images to create your own campaigns and promotions for your publication's sections, features, Classifieds, subscription specials and more (23, 24).

RECRUITMENT

Apply a new crop of recruitment ads and images to your third-quarter sales strategy.

- Garner more listing sales from employers and more interest from job seekers with a print and online campaign promoting "hot summer jobs" geared toward students and seasonal employers like summer camps, pools, restaurants, and waterparks (37).
- Other ads target schools and employers interested in recruiting applicants in transition. Find a graduate job fair promotion as well as a career college ad focused on "dream jobs" (38).
- Help a local healthcare employer market job openings to candidates who want to move their careers forward with a leading healthcare team. Plus, help an industrial employer build a great team with a great ad design showcasing their latest opportunities (39).

Here are some more helpful tips to get you started:

- Schedule a pre-listing home inspection, so you can address problems that could become future roadblocks to your home sale.
- Enhance your home's curb appeal with a professional cleaning, painting and minor repairs that could affect a potential buyer's first impression.
- Reduce clutter in your home, and ensure it is free of pet odors and pets when potential buyers are visiting.
- Choose a realtor who uses market analysis to determine the right selling price, so you can avoid multiple price reductions that could cause your home to be viewed in an unfavorable light.

How to make relocation go smoothly

People relocate for various reasons. Many relocate for professional opportunities, while others relocate to pursue their education. And while some may relocate to enjoy a lower cost of living, others may find themselves relocating to satisfy their sense of adventure.

Regardless of why a person is relocating, doing so without preparing for the move can make the transition that much more difficult. According to data from the U.S. Census Bureau, roughly 19 percent of the 35.9 million people one year and over who moved between 2012 and 2013 did so for a job-related reason. Relocating to a new city for a job is different than moving from one home to another within the same community. Relocating to a new city can be a life-changing event that requires planning and maybe even a little luck to make it work.

Examine your finances. Moving is expensive, and it can be even more expensive when moving to an artsy new city. If you are moving to pursue career opportunities but don't yet have a job offer in hand, examine your finances and work out a worst-case scenario in the event that your job hunt takes longer than you hoped for. Unless you have a benefactor who can help you pay your bills and avoid debt while you look for a job, make sure you have several months' worth of living expenses saved up before moving.

Research the job market. Certain cities have more opportunities for people in certain fields than others, so make sure the city you plan to relocate to is a place where you will have ample opportunities in your chosen line of work. Otherwise you might find yourself setting for a career you don't like or relocating again to a job market more accommodating to someone in your field.

Research the real estate market. Before hitting the road and heading for your new home, research the real estate market in that area. Try to find out the average rental price via online forums or even online newspaper classified sections. Find out if people tend to live with roommates or go it alone in the city you're relocating to. If you are moving to a city where you know very few people or no one at all, consider becoming someone's roommate. The right roommate can provide an instant social network and help you learn the ropes of your adopted home. If you plan to live alone and rent, recognize that many landlords will require a guarantor before renting to tenants with no income.

Don't be shy. Unless you are moving to a place where you already have a built-in social network, you should expect to encounter some loneliness upon arriving in your new location. Resolve to make the most of all your new home has to offer by joining a social organization, connecting with your university's alumni group or volunteering with local charities. If you have a job lined up, sign up for company-sponsored outings or teams.

Relocating to a new city can produce mixed feelings of anxiety and excitement. Planning ahead and doing some homework can help you as you transition to your new home.

How to build a strong professional network

Networking is often seen as a means to further one's career, but developing a group of professional contacts can also be a great way for professionals to stay abreast of the trends in their particular fields. Networking also can benefit small businesses as they look to connect with vendors that can help them grow their businesses.

A strong professional network is not built overnight, and many professionals spend years nurturing relationships with people in their networks. Individuals and business owners can take several approaches when building professional networks they will rely on for years to come.

Ask around. Some individuals may hesitate to seek networking advice out of fear of appearing opportunistic. But successful professionals understand the need to network, so your colleagues will likely be glad to offer referrals if they're in a position to do so. When receiving a referral, ask if you can use the person's name, which should help you establish a connection during the introductory process. Resist the idea that using a colleague's name when meeting a professional you hope to work with is something sinister, as the name will only help you with the introduction. Once the introduction has been made, it's up to you to do the rest.

Get active in your industry. Referrals are not the only way to develop professional contacts. Being active in your industry by joining professional organizations and attending seminars and other industry events is a great way to expand your network. Volunteer to work with professional organizations when possible or offer to host information sessions or educational workshops at your business.

Reconnect with your college or university. Another great way to build a professional network is to reconnect with your college or university. When meeting people affiliated with your alma mater, the ice has already been broken in a sense, as the school is essentially a built-in connection. You also won't have to worry about the awkwardness that might come when meeting a professional contact with whom you have seen in common. Alumni organizations and local chapters can introduce you to people who earned your degree at your school, and many people love to help out their fellow alumni.

Employ social media. Social media is not just for kids. In fact, social media is a great way for professionals to make and maintain professional contacts. LinkedIn, for example, makes it easy to connect with fellow professionals who are looking to do the same. Twitter can be used to promote professional events such as seminars or workshops you are working with. These platforms can be used to grow your network quickly and easily, but be sure to vet each person you connect with to make sure you are affiliating yourself with the right people. Building a strong professional network takes patience and hard work. But the right network can pay dividends for years to come.
